

Los primeros estudios conceptuales del F-22 Raptor comenzaron en 1980 y se tardó más de 20 años en poner ese concepto en servicio y con no pocos cambios sobre sus prestaciones iniciales. La sexta generación de aviones caza no es probable que entre en servicio antes del 2030, si se asume que los actuales cazas de quinta generación (F-22 Raptor y F-35 Joint Strike Fighter) se entregan en las fechas esperadas. Con tanto tiempo por delante, es difícil prever las características de los aviones de combate del futuro. Intentaremos, sin embargo, analizar la visión que se tiene hoy en día de las prestaciones deseadas, no exentas de contradicciones, aunque motivos técnicos, económicos o políticos podrán cambiar esta visión fácilmente
