

42 year old Joe Peters has a problem. His smashed little toe doesn't worry him half as much as his wife's demand that he talk to his family doctor about the demons of his youth that Joe would rather forget. What will he say? What will Doc think of him? And what would his son, Jamie, say if he was ever to find out? But 13 year old Jamie Peters also has a problem. A chance encounter he had during the holidays is playing on his conscience and he wants to talk to someone about it. Should he talk to his best friend, Bas, or maybe his mum or dad "but what would they say? What would they think of him? Complicating things for Jamie is the fact that his father has an injured toe and is rehashing some old traumas from the past so Jamie doesn't feel like adding to his dad's troubles. Add to the conundrum his increasingly red and tender left testicle, and life " which should be such a ball (if that's an appropriate term) for a boy from a privileged family living in one of the most beautiful places in Australia " is becoming just a little too complicated. As they find the courage to overcome barriers and speak their secrets, they find they are not alone, nor are their problems unique.
